HISTORY OF NEW PROVIDENCE

(Submitted by Priscilla Pickering Weathersby (Mrs. R. W.), 815 Green-wood Ave., Clarksville, Tenn. 37040.)

Given below is an interesting story of old New Providence written in 1923 by Paul J. Wyatt, who was born in New Providence in 1865 and died in 1927. He was the son of Dr. and Mrs. R. C. Wyatt who lived on E Street in New Providence. The Wyatt home was exactly where the home of Mrs. Ada Winn is now. Dr. Wyatt's daughter, Mrs. Andrew Perry Jackson, kept this article that her brother wrote for the CLARKSVILLE LEAF CHRONICLE and kindly shares it with us. This tells of New Providence as Paul J. Wyatt knew it when he was a boy.

"It would be hard to make the younger population of Clarksville believe that their little stringtown neighbor village on the west, New Providence, was at one time, and indeed for many years, a much more important commercial point than Clarksville; yet such was the case, and to say the least, the little town across the Red was a strong rival in a business sense until the Civil War--and after. As late as 1870 the writer remembers going with his father to see the steamboats land at Red River Landing, Trice's Landing and Lynwood Landing and have seen great quantities of tobacco loaded at these places. At each of these landings there were immense brick warehouses near the river, and well paved wharves, with good roads leading to town.

In the early history of the town New Providence was, in fact, two towns the "Upper end" or western portion being incorporated under the name of "Meachamtown", while the eastern or Lower end was called "Cumberland Town". In my boyhood days, however, we designated them differently, and the upper end was known as "Pulltight" and the lower end was "Lick-skillet". Many were the battles royal between the loyal citizens (among the school children) of the river ends of "Stringtown". The churches were situated midway of the place, and for several years the public school was taught in the same locality. Among other teachers I call to mind was the Rev. Mr. Trimble, a tall lanky muscular Christian of the Baptist faith, who believed in moral ? to a certain extent but who was always ready to back up his rules and commands with a very long tough hickory.

After forty years I don't suppose it will be considered telling tales out of school to mention those old times, especially as the great majority of the boys and girls are scattered to the four winds. Of a house full of live, mischiovous girls and boys then, it would be a difficult matter to get a dozen together now. The business men of the town at that time, as I recall them, beginning at the upper end and coming down were: Jno. Tandy, who lived in a brick house just beyond the toll gate, while L. S. Whitefield, his brother-in-law, was his near neighbor, living just above the cave spring. Both of these gentlemen were tobacconist, besides pretty big farmers, and were among the most substantial men in the place, the former a leading spirit in the Baptist Church, while the latter was a Steward in the Methodist Church for many years. Next came McDaniel & Barbee, who were in the general merchandising business, in a brick house about 100 yards west of the Dr. Whitefield residence. There were two more store houses between them and the Thomas Riggins store, but I can't recall at this time who occupied them. Mr. Riggins had a large frame building with a cellar under the greater part of it, and did a big business in all kinds of merchandise. Just across the street Leigh & Buckley had their place of business. For many years the post office was located in this store.

Next to the Riggins house on the north side of the street was Matthew Small's harness and saddle shop, and his work was known far and wide as good honest, hand-made goods. His residence was just east of his shop.

On the south side of the pike was the big general store of Trahan & Garrot, who enjoyed an immense Kentucky trade as well as their share of the local business. East of this was a double frame house (store) in which Dr. R. W. Thomas later conducted the same business. In the other side of this building M. B. Coleman had a dry goods store. The next house on the same side of the street was Stephen Lee's Boot and Shoe Shop, and I remeber the sign over the door. He had the picture of a boot painted in light blue on a large board and "Made and Repaired" in heavy black letters. After a time he added another sign above this one reading "Cakes". Then time and weather obliterated the picture of the boot and shoe, leaving the sign to read " Cakes Made and Repaired". As boys we were chased out of his house more than once for trying to get our cakes repaired.

Next door to Lee's stood the calaboose, with its iron bars which was very seldom used, but which had an awful look to us boys who stood in awe of its very name. Then came the double pond where we had such fine skating in winter. It was no unusual sight to see thirty or forty boys and girls at one time on this skating pond, the site of which is now cultivated in tobacco. This reminds me that of all the fine ponds in the old town, in the olden times, scarcely any are left. Forty years ago it was easy to catch a long string of big perch out of any one of a dozen ponds, all of which are now dry. In winter a great many of the old residents put ice in their underground ice houses, and it was no infrequent thing to hear the ice wagons begin to rattle over the frozen ground at 2 o'clock in the morning when the ice was considered thick enough to put up. At such times the negroes, under a foreman, would build a big bon-fire on the bank for both light and warmth, and well wrapped, and with the inevitable jug of whiskey with which they were kept supplied, it soon turned out to be a race between the haulers and the cutters, and a frolic was made of a hard Something like thirty years ago, however, for some cause, probably earthquakes, the bottom dropped out of nearly all of the ponds and since that time few of them have held water.

East of the double pond stood Mr. Elza Trice's cooper shop, where a big force of men were employed making tobacco hogs and flour barrels. All of the stave and hoops had to be dressed by and - staves drawn with a "drawing knife" and jointed on an inverted plane. At this time Providence was a distributing center for flour barrels, and furnished many to the mills on West Fork Creek - Davie's, Johnson's, Henry's, Peacher's, McCauley's, Bowman's, and others. Several big shops were run full time.

Next to the Trice shop on the east lived Mr. K. B. Davie in a large two-story house, later occupied by the genial and big hearted Dan Gold. The site of this place is now occupied by the elegant home of J. J.

Garrot, who with his good wife are among the very few old residents of the town still living there.

Adjoining Mr. Garrot's lived Uncle Johnny Fairfax and his son, Eph, who was a never ending source of entertainment and amusement to the boys. For many years Eph carried the mail between New Providence and Clarksville, and with "Kate" and the cart served Uncle Sam faithfully as any mail carrier he could boast about. Eph was the efficient sexton of the Methodist Church long as he lived in New Providence and it was his greatest delight to ring the bell which he would do long and loud on every occasion. Many and varied were the tricks the boys would pay on Eph, but wee unto the unlucky one who made him mad and then came within the reach of his ever ready crooked walking stick.

Then came the two churches within a hundred yards of each other - one on either side of the street with always a friendly rivalry between them as to who could have the biggest congregation and do the most good.

On the south side of the road next to the Baptist church lived Mr. Duncan, a native born Scotchman of high character, and one of the best house painters in the county; while across the street from him was a tan yard with its vats and buildings, which was owned, I think, by W. H. Burgess, Sr.

On the same side of the street the tan yard, and adjoining it was a long two story house immediately on the street lengthwise, and was used for various purposes. When I first remember the post office was located here, as well as a gun shop owned by a Mr. Gordon, who had the reputation of making the best rifles in the country. Old Squire Mack Burgess, grandfather of H. O. Hambaugh, also had his office here, and there was a millinery shop in the west room of the house.

Across the street lived Mr. W. S. Poindexter, cashier of the Providence Bank, and adjoining his yard was a brick store house which was used by Harry Joseph as a clothing store and afterwards by Bales as a drug store, while between this building and the Masonic Hall, was a long frame tobacco warehouse operated by Mr. John Howell, and where tobacco was sold on the "board", as it was also in Mr. Garrott's big warehouse on the opposite side of the street. Here Col. T. D. Leonard, Tom Hyman, Col. Young, and Dan Gold and other auctioneers would cry off each hogshead to the highest bidder. At times the bidding would be spirited and full of ginger. Sales were also held at the warehouse on the river.

Just east of the Garrott warehouse was the "courthouse" where law was expounded and justice dealt out. Here "Brother" W. H. Watts had his law office, and Judge David Luck Smith held his sessions of court and married many runaway couples from Kentucky, who had ridden horseback or come in buggies to get "hitched up" in Tennessee. I recall one such case. The groom was a one gangling, jeans-clad backwoodsman from north while his bride was dressed in calico, cut too short at both ends and out of style by a mile. They both rode the same mule, the girl riding behind on a blanket. After the ceremony the happy groom put his hand in his pocket and asked the Squire "What's the damage?" On being told that he could pay whatever he thought right, he handed the Judge a quarter and said he thought that amount "would be about right" and the happy pair remounted their mule and started off home, both munching contentedly on a "stage plank" of gingerbread. These people had ridden all night, traveling nearly fifty miles.

Next in order on the north side of the pike and at the junction of another street was the James Edlin shoe shop. Mr. Edlin was known far and wide as a fine workman and his specialty was high top boots. He was a man who had read extensively and when the spirited move was on him, he would talk entertainingly by the hour.

Then came a big building used as a carriage and wagon factory with blacksmith shop attached, owned by Mr. J. W. Smith, and George Vance, a big black man, had the smithy, and it was our delight to watch him handle the hot iron and make the sparks fly.

On the opposite side of the street, B. M. McGee has his grocery and then came another blacksmith shop. Near this shop was a livery stable owned by William Wheatly, who always kept a string of good horses, and he was well known by the old-time fair-goers. "Denver" and "Black Hills" were two of his best trotters in the 2:30 class as I remember.

Across a narrow street was Mr. Cornelius Mehigan's big two story frame business house, the upper story of which he used as his shop, tin shop, while the lower floor was his hardware and stove department.

Adjoining the Mehigan house on the east, Kendrick and Pettus the Central Warehouse, a frame building 60 x 200 feet which did an immense business for many years and which was the predecessor of the warehouse of the same name in Clarksville.

Pettus and Hambaugh owned the next house, a two story brick in which they had a stock of heavy groceries, liquors, etc. This firm was composed of Thomas F. Pettus, one of the most progressive and broadminded citizens the town ever had, and its first mayor & F. C. Hambaugh who was also well known as a shrewd longheaded business man.

On the other side of the street was the bank in its own building, and next to that a drug store woned by Mr. V. W. Smith, who at 80 years of age was still in the drug business there. Next to the drug store A. A. Jonson & Bros. had a dry goods establishment, and then came the hotel, owned and run by Mr. and Mrs. Pleas Barbee. The kitchen chimney was all that was left to show where the house stood.

The large two story brick now owned and used as a tobacco factory by Squire H. O. Hambaugh was built and used by the late John K. Smith for a wholesale grocery, and it is said this house would sometimes unload a steamboat up from New Orleans with a full cargo of sugar and molasses, and give the boat a return trip of tobacco, flour and bacon. At this time a pork packery was operated between the Hopkinsville Pike and Trice's Landing, and did a flourishing business.

Then came the big cooper shop of R. H. Welker, where thousands of barrels (flour) were turned out annually, while across the street was a general store of D. W. Scott, who did a lucrative business until his health forced him to retire.

Near the warehouse at Trice's Landing, Mrs. Morris had a boarding house where the passengers from the boats were wont to stop while in Port, and where the clerks at the warehouse boarded.

Further up the hill lived Squire W. C. Smith, John Scott, W. H. Drane, the Jacksons whose names I've forgotten.

After leaving Scott's store the next place of business was a small grocery run by an old Negro, Israel Pettus, who had saved up enough to open up in a small way and who enjoyed a considerable trade among his own color. At this time it was unusual to see a Negro merchant.

In the early 70's a stage line was operated between New Providence and Dover, and mail was carried over this route. Milton Brandon was the driver and pulled the ribbons over four prancing, high-stepping horses hitched to a yellow stage coach. My recollection is that every boy in town would have given anything he possessed to have been seen in his place. Two or maybe it was three trips a week he made and he nearly always had a load.

Among the old residents of New Providence whom I recall now were Dr. B. N. Herring, Dr. Morrison, Dr. R. C. Wyatt, John Leigh, John R. Martin, James Brunty, Dr. J. C. Cabeniss, Mrs. Rossington, mother of Mr. R. B. Rossington, one of the most lovable old Irish ladies imaginable, who always had something bright and witty to say; B. Homer, Berry Lyle, Jim Williams, Squire Harrelson, Wm H. Turnley, Jack and Charles Everitt, Prof. D. M. Quarles, Jim Buck Osburn, John Staton, Sr and Jr., Robert Poole and so many others it would be hard to name them all.

The big majority are dead and gone, and the most of the houses mentioned above are also gone-----
